PITTSBURGH, PA, December 11, 2019 – Steel City Death Club Recordings is thrilled to announce Pittsburgh based band Ugly Blondes and the release of their record Fluff Capacitor. Fluff Capacitor is the bands fourth and heaviest record yet, with riffs that are heavy, fuzzy, sludgy and imminent.

Fluff Capacitor can only be described as a brick wall of sonic fusion that brings you into Ugly Blondes' world of the absurd. Catchy hooks meant for pop songs are thrown into the world of sludge and doom. It's metal for people who aren't metal heads. It's energetic punk rock for people who prefer to watch from the back and head bang. Each song acts as a new chapter in a book of screwed up children's fables; you'll find yourself cheerfully singing along to songs about vampires who prefer candy to blood, and evil clones usurping their host bodies. At only 23 minutes in length, the album leaves the listener hitting replay over and over again, as if they were looking into a spinning black and white swirl meant for psychic hypnosis.

The album is streaming everywhere on November 11th, 2019 with the single Destroyer debuting October 15th, 2019.
